Feed the levain the night before with equal weights of flour and water. Mix the dough with 75 percent hydration and let it autolyse for an hour. Add salt, then do four sets of stretch and folds thirty minutes apart. Bulk fermentation takes about five hours at a warm kitchen temperature. Shape a tight boule, place it in a floured banneton, and proof overnight in the fridge. Bake in a preheated Dutch oven at 250 C with the lid on for twenty minutes, then uncover and bake until the crust is deep brown.